Are you Eligible for the Debt Reduction Program?

California's Child Support Program: A Resource for Parents

Do you owe back child support (arrears) for a period when your child(ren) received public assistance? In certain child support cases, the Debt Reduction Program (DRP) allows for a parent to pay less than his or her total arrears. Take this opportunity to see if you qualify and make an offer.

- You may be eligible for the DPR program if you meet the following criteria:
  - Submit an application with an offer amount
  - Arrears are owed for a period your child(ren) received public assistance in California
  - Gross income does not exceed the family limit size in the county or state of residence
  - All the arrears owed on your case(s) cannot be paid off within 12 months, based on your current income and assets
- Circumstances that will make you ineligible for DPR program:
  - Intentional failure to pay child support in anticipation of a compromise
  - Concealment of income, assets, or any reasonably anticipated income or assets or intentional withholding or falsifying of financial information

- Payment Options:
  - Monthly repayment or lump sum repayment (may be required under certain circumstances)
